

I would just like to express my deep concern regarding the exceptionally growing rate of consolidation in the broadcast arena.

While I support the growth of any business enterprise, the ever-dwindling privately held local/national market share of the radio waves (broadcasting industry) is alarming. This is of greatest concern as it pertains to the coverage, or lack of coverage, of news worthy events that the public at large must be exposed. Ultimately, all media corporations and its representatives have the moral responsibility to report information, unbiased, to the public. This reporting must occur without first evaluating its economic or political alliances and affiliations. After all, these airwaves belong first and foremost to the public. Current law, regulations, and trends warrant immediate review and action of the FCC.
